

Established in 2006, the Global Cabin Air Quality Executive (GCAQE) is the lead organisation globally representing pilots, cabin crew, maintenance, aviation and other workers calling for solutions to poor supply air aircraft cabin air quality.

Why should your union or association consider joining the GCAQE?

- We represent pilot, cabin crew and engineering unions globally with full or associate membership status. We meet annually for a two-day meeting in London.
- Tap into our unmatched global expertise specifically related to bleed air contamination.
- The GCAQE has developed a leading reputation on the cabin/bleed air topic that is recognized by worker organisations, government, academia and industry.
- We supported the biggest conferences ever held on the topic in London in 2017, 2019, 2021 and 2013 and have another London conference scheduled for September 2024.
- We have secured over US$ 2 million of research into lubricant toxicology and medical research. The GCAQE has also facilitated with our members, air and swab sampling, as well as Ultra Fine Particle (UFP) measuring on aircraft.
- We are driving a large number of international actions forward on this topic and it is our knowledge and international approach that is ensuring real solutions are developed covering all aspects: Flight safety, operational, regulatory, design, OHS, health, political...
- We developed a unique global online reporting system called GCARS – Global cabin Air Reporting System. GCARS for the first time enables data to be globally collected and analysed. gcars.app
- We led the way in developing the extensive medical protocol for those exposed to contaminated air and which is now published in a medical journal.
- Join our global network of aircrew/aviation personnel and share knowledge via an online website; database, regular newsletter updates, webinars and focussed working groups.
- Help us to educate your members in relation to cabin air contamination.

- Don't assume others will fix the problem for you or that there is no problem. We are ensuring that solutions are coming, but we need to work together to ensure they are suitable and implemented.
- We have a very loud voice together. Become part of the solution and work within a globally highly respected cabin air quality team.
- To join up, please email the gcaqe@gcaqe.org and ask for details.
